The river Thames runs through the center of London from west to east. Its name comes from an old word for river. The city is a great capital city because of this river. In past times, the Thames was a great road of water. This ‘road’ brought people to London, and by the 1700s it brought things from round the world – tea, sugar, wood and a lot of money. Londoners built a second bridge across the Thames in 1750 at Westminster. By the year 1819, there were five bridges across the river. They changed life in the city. 1

Today, there are thirty-four bridges. The most famous is east of the city center, near the Tower of London. Workers finished Tower Bridge in 1894. The road across the bridge goes up in the center when big ships come through. The bridge is one of the most famous places in London. 2

The river helped London in many ways, but it also brought problems. For years, people threw things into it. The city’s toilets ran into the river, too. The river was very dirty and its water was dangerous. By the 1950s, there were no fish. Today, things are different. 3
